Why are grants important for you?

For your research ideas to be tested and realized you need bright people and state-of-art facilities – these cost money. For your academic career to progress you need to demonstrate that your research ideas are worthy of investment of public funds in you. It is much easier to collaborate, nationally and internationally, work with the best, network effectively to build new collaborations, if you have funding.

Main topics covered:

- Statement of need and role of evidence appraisal
- Writing the research question, hypothesis, aims and objectives
- Writing the implementation strategies/ methods
- Writing the potential outcomes and likely impact
- How to write a budget and key personnel requirement
- Writing the data management and plan of analysis
- Compilation of the report and the executive summary
- Charting of the timeline
- Peer review process and addressing the comments of peer reviewers
- Common reasons why proposals are declined? What can I do to increase the success rate of acceptance of a proposal?
- Letter of recommendation
- Institute support
- Funding opportunities: funding for basic science, clinical science, and public health research.
